November 3, 2016 | The Conference Center at NJHA, Princeton

Registration: 9 – 9:30 a.m.

Registration Fee: Complimentary

Program: 9:30 a.m. – 3:30 p.m.

Seminar: EDU 1696

The American Hospital Association's Health Research & Educational Trust has enrolled intensive care units (ICUs) from specific regions across the United States to take part in the AHRQ Safety Program for ICUs: CLABSI/CAUTI. This national program is designed to reduce or eliminate central line-associated bloodstream infections (CLABSI) and catheter-associated urinary tract infections (CAUTI) in critical care settings using the Comprehensive Unit-based Safety Program (CUSP) and evidence-based practices to reduce CLABSIs and CAUTIs.

NJHA is hosting this in-person educational session for critical care units participating in this collaborative. This educational session is also open to non-participating units.

OBJECTIVES:

- Understand how to interpret and analyze outcome data trend reports
- Recognize how the Comprehensive Unit Based Safety Program (CUSP), builds the capacity to address safety issues by combining clinical best practices and the science of safety
- Identify best practices for the prevention of CLABSI and CAUTI
- Discuss any barriers to implementation of the project and how to overcome them
- Understand the concept of sustainability, how to maintain gains and continue work after the national project ends.

TARGET AUDIENCE:

Administrative staff, doctors, nurses, members of ICU CAUTI/CLABSI committees, educators and infection prevention staff
