OVERVIEW

Researchers agree that Population Health encompasses the health outcomes of a group of individuals, including the distribution of such outcomes within the group. It is incumbent that healthcare leaders understand that such population health outcomes are the product of multiple determinants of health including medical care, public health, genetics, behaviors and social and environmental factors. This highly interactive two-day seminar looks beyond traditional strategic modeling by exploring approaches used nationally. Discover what makes these approaches successful and how you can apply them in your organization.

OBJECTIVES

1. Understand the economic and quality mandate for population health and why our current healthcare system cannot deliver or support this model
2. Understand the role of disruptive innovation to support the growth and development of population health
3. Understand the economic forces and the business and clinical rationale for population health
4. Learn 'best practice approaches' to secure a long term viable physician-management partnership towards the creation of a population health infrastructure
5. Learn the fundamental operational components of a population health system and the role that each plays in the ultimate health and wellbeing of a defined population
