Seminar: EDU 1940

OVERVIEW

Community and state preparedness are essential to the health security of all Americans. The degree of integration of health care services with each other and across the continuum of public health, behavioral health, and social services contributes significantly to overall community health and relatedly, the community's resilience to withstand the impacts of a disaster. Events in the last few years have demonstrated how critical it is for health systems locally and across the country to be ready and able to respond quickly and effectively.

AMY HERMAN – will guide us through methods to change the way we look at and respond to events through The Art of Perception.

SHERI FINK – author of Five Days at Memorial and War Hospital, will share unique circumstances that challenge the way we prepare.

Ocean County Public Health Department's MUKESH ROY and DANIEL REGENYE, with DR. HILLEL PELTZ from CHEMED Health Center, will discuss challenges, partnerships and best practices from their experiences during a measles outbreak.

ELYA BALTAZAR and REBECCA LIS from Northwest Healthcare Response Network, will share their experiences working with community partners to increase medical surge capabilities and share a preparedness curriculum to build community resilience for a disaster.

OBJECTIVE

- Identify unique methods and creative solutions in the preparation for, response to and recovery from an infectious disease outbreak
- Identify at least one tangible, actionable method to develop and/or strengthen partnerships in a medical surge event
- List two methods to change the way one reacts and responds to major events
